Everyone knows that there will be some prayers that will go unanswered for the rest of our lives. Over time, the need to have that prayer answered dissipates or perhaps we just forget, or we accept that at least on this side of heaven, there simply will be no answer—and we learn to live with it.

Tammy Waite has asked God to tell her why when she did a foolish thing, even though she did it in His service, so many people had to pay with such tremendous loss. Twenty-five years have come and gone and she is still asking the question that floods her mind every time she hears a siren or sees a car traveling too fast.

Why did You let it happen, Lord?

Or when she sees herself in a mirror. That's when her unanswered question hurts the most. Because it is always accompanied with an echo that will likely never go away. Carl. Kristine. Audrey.
