You probably already know that police work is dangerous.

Our police officers are shot at. They race through our streets going fast enough to end their lives at a moment's notice. Their job is to run toward threatening situations. Their daily tools of the trade are a Remington 12 gage shot gun and a .40 semi-automatic pistol.

We've all seen the funeral proceedings for fallen policemen. The 21-gun salute. The bugle player playing taps. The fellow police officers presenting arms. The American flag presented to a spouse flanked by a grief-stricken family. In 2011, 175 police officers in the United States were killed in the line of duty.

Police work is dangerous.

But what you may not know is that for all the danger that our police officers face on the job, the real danger awaits when their shift is done.
