Michele Madden's brother, Jamie, was a great guy. He was happy, the life of the party, would give a stranger the shirt off his back and had no problem getting girlfriends. That is why it was such a shock when Michele learned that, in the middle of a promising life, Jamie committed suicide. Six months later, Michele's heart was still as devastated as if the suicide had occurred the day before. "Losing a loved-one to suicide is one of the most painful things a person will ever endure," says Michele.

In September 2011, she started Aftershock, a ministry created specifically for those who have suffered the loss of a loved-one to suicide. "I use to wonder if there would be many people at the Rock who would need Aftershock. But in just 18 months, we've had 40 people attend."
