It all started innocently enough.

Just before my freshman year of high school, my dad got a new job and we all moved to Oklahoma. I was an athlete, but by the time I arrived at the new school in the fall, the football team had already been established and there was essentially no room for me on the roster.

Mom quickly grew to hate it in Oklahoma, and started pushing dad to move us back to Anaheim. So, just six months after moving, we were on our way back to our old neighborhood. By this time, it was late spring and my high school already had try-outs for the baseball team. It turned out, at least at my private school, once you missed your freshman year on a team, there really was no winning your way back. You were done.

With football and baseball now removed from me, I felt adrift. Now that my time and mind were unoccupied, I adopted a give-the-finger-to-the-man attitude and began the party scene in earnest. Just like that, I had a bunch of burnout friends and we got high on pot, speed, cocaine, meth, drank like fish, laughed, cursed and reveled in our we-don't-care lives.
