Greg was only too happy to be done with his speech and sat down to yuk it up with his buddies who were sitting near. There would be only one reason to listen to the next person give their speech and that would be to see if he could inflict a little pain to its presenter.

Rudy Matthews was next and a darn good target. He stepped to the front of the class. "I'm Rudy," he said. "And my hero is my dad who died when I was two years old. He left me this."

A chill went through Greg's body. His heart started to race. Rudy held up a well-worn piece of paper and Greg couldn't take his eyes off of it.

Rudy read different parts of the letter from his dad. His dad was talking to Rudy. Better yet, his dad was teaching Rudy.

Greg looked longingly at the letter that was for the most part, out of view. A letter all about his dad's love, Greg thought as tears began to roll down his cheeks.

He had no way to know it, but everything in his life had just changed.
